M Bel stated that partial injury to this dam

had been -ustained several years since, but a re cent tresh-t nad so enlarged the breach as to render the passage of boats through the channel which it was destined to deepen, not only difficul, but often extremely dangerous—that in a few months the navigation would be entirely interrupted, if the injury was not repaired. A bar had already formed below the dam, in consequence of this breach, which wou d soon also interrupt the navigation of the Ohio, if not removed. Mr. Yulee submitted a resolution calling for information in reference to volunteers who served under Gen Scott in 1814. Adopted.

Mr. Ashley introduced a bill, explanatory the intent and meaning of the act of February, 1847, to raise for a limited time an additional military force, so far as it applies to bounty lands to soldiers. The department, he said, had decived that where the soldier dies or is killed in battle, thbounty land provision will be confined exclusive ly to the widow, children or father and mother of the deceased. This bill declared the intent of the act to be that the brothers and sisters also should be included. The bill was read twice and referred After the transaction of some other unimpor in committee of the whole, took up the joint reso lation from the committee on military affairs, to refund money for expenses incarred, subsistence or transportation furnished, and money advanced by individuals, for the use of the volunteers before or after being mustered into the service.

Various amendments were proposed-some adopted and others rejected-and the discussion on the bill and amendments was continued with much animation until the hour of adjournment. Mr. Wick, during the debate, said he had sat still at his desk very frequently and witnessed the passage of bills of exceedingly popular titles, but calculated in their execution to promote stealing from the treasury. He considered this joint resolution most decidedly of that character, and would not suffer it to pass without raising his voice against it. In the raising of volunteers, contributions had been made by States and individuals, without expectation of return.

Would it be right or necessary, in the present condition of the Treasury, to provide for refunding such expenditures, at the time patriorically mad, without expectation of return? It the State authorities had, in any instances, operated on the raising of volunteers, hand over hand, and carelessly, and so encountered expense unneces-sarily, would it be well to throw this burden on the Treasury? In his own State, two regiments were raised in 1847, and so snugly and haudsomely had the matter ocen managed, that he was per-suaded no individual would ever present a claim under the resolution.

For this good management credit was due to the Governor of Indiana, and the Adjutant General, and also much was due to the farmers of the country who tendered wagons for transportation, and opened their houses, barns, paniries and cellars to the volunteers, and to citizens who threw their contributions into a hat, to meet contingen-

made,
He contended that the same patriotic feeling which led volunt-ers to turn out, was also suffi cleat to induce contributions to meet the expenditures indicated by his resolution. He warned the committee that if the resolution should pass a would make any particular difference whether it was so referred, or retained for the consideration of the senate. He did not know what were the individual opinious of hat committee; but he did finally probability the committee of the sunday of th not think this a resolution—embracing as it did, an isolated question—of a character to render the reference to a standing committee necessary.

When a certain resolution of an honorable Senator, relative to Mexico, was introduced here, he (Mr. A ) had considered it most wise - most circumspect-most judicious-in view of the relations in which the country then stood toward Mexico-to move its reterence to the committee on loreign relations. The motion had been resisted by the Senator, who introduced the resultition, as unnecessary, and evincing a spirit of hos-tility to the objects of the resolution. He deemed the proper course now was to fix a day for the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. Hale proposed an amendment to come in at the close of Mr. Allen's resolution, as he wished, he said, that the resolution would comain something tangible-should express som-thing The amendment proposed to congratulate the French on the measures taken by the new government for the immediate emancipation of the slaves throughout France and her colonies. Mr. Downes opposed the reference of the resolution to the committee on foreign relations, and so also did Mr. Hale, though for different rea-

Mr. Calhoun entirely concurred in the sentiments of the resolution introduced by the Sena or from Ohio, (Mr. Allen,) and thought that the Snate were as well qualified as the committee to judge of its character. But the time, he proceeded to argue, had not arrived for the adoption of such a resolution of congratulation. Much re-if the French people were as successful in forming a republican constitution—in establishing a republican government—as they had been in demoishing the old one -hey would then be entitled, not only to the congratulations of this goremment, but of the whole civilized world. But events might grow out of this revolution which might ultimately place France in the arms of military despotism. We should wait until we see what is to be the end of all this. He had never before known a case which required from us more serious, deliberate consideration. Whether France succeeded or not, would, in his opinion, depend upon whether she can pre-vent war-and this would depend greatly upon whether she will have the moderation and good sense not to interfere in the affairs of the nations around her. He trusted, also, that the people of those other governments would look on, and not interfere with France. It would then be seen whether she is prepared for a republican govern-If she succeeded, it would do more towards crumbling the thrones of Europe, to establish liberal principles throughout the world, than any other movemen which had ever been made. But it she fails, it will do more injury to the cause of human liberty in Europe than all the efforts of political despotism. He thought the wise course was to lay this re solution on the table, on the s le ground that its adoption would be premature. He moved, accordingly, to lay the resolution on the table.

And it was for this reason that he heartily concurred with the Senator from South Carolina in the wisdom and propriety of seeing the result of this great movement, before adopting any expressions of congra tulation. The first of May would be on early for the consideration of this resolution; the result would not then be known; and he, there fore, moved to strike out 1st May, and insert 1st been his in ention to propose the first Monday in April, for the consideration of the resolution, and he now desired his motion to be so modified. Mr. Foote replied to some of the remarks of Mr. Calhoun. The people of this country, he believed, had made up their minds, and there was no reason for delay. His principal of ject in rising was to refer to the fact that the organ in this city of a large political party, had openly declared against this movement - this struggle for freedom-and in favor of the government which had just been overthrown. And there were Senators on this floor-high in standing, and whose opin- afternoon says: ions possess great influence abroad-whose course was in consonance with the views so exhad declared that the efforts in Europe in favor of iberal principlies had failed in every instance .-He was prepared to controvert that statement, and to show, fro a hostory, that it is entirely erroneous -that the march of liberal principles in Europe, since 1789, has been steadily onward.

Mr. Underwood (Mr. Foote giving way) explained that be had not intended to state that the political condition of the people of Europe had not in many instances been improved. He had only intended to say, that every effort to establish republican governments had tailed.

Mr. Foole expressed himself gratified at the explanation, and concluded with orging imm.are action on the resolution. To hesitate was to destrey forever the effect produced by the course their contributions into a har, to fact the states had been destrict forever the effect produced by fact to feel this less economical (as he believed to be true) this Should we show to the world that we are unsupported by the state of the worthy of such a representative, who had only imita ed the example of Mr. Jefferson when he was there? Mr. Hilliard, of Ala, who was entitled to the floor, addressed the committee at length, on the war, its origin, progress, and probable termination,-condemning the President for i legal'y and unconstitutionally precipitating the war-complimenting the gallantry of our army, but declaring that the glory acquired was not under the administration, but in sp. t. of the administration. In regard to the indemnity obtained, he said that Mr. Buchanan had been willing to give $5,000,000 for New Mexico, and $15 000,000 for SENATE. The resolution author zing Doctor Palmer to make certain amendments to his report on the commerce, &c., of Asia, was reported back from the Library Committee, by Mr. Davis, of Miss., and after some discussion between that gentleman and Mr. Benton was adopted. The Senate reconsidered the vote by which the bill was passed granting a pension of $40 per month, during his natural life, to Patrick Walker, who lost one arm and the hand of the other at the battle of Churubusco.

The bill was then amended by striking out the words "during his natural life" and inserting in lieu thereof "for one year from the passage of this bill," and thus amended, was again passed

On motion of Mr. Allen, the Senate then re sumed the consideration of the joint resolutions tendering congratulations to France on the esnt there of a republican government. Mr. Baltwin was opposed to fixing a day for the consideration of the resolutions, and in layor of referring it to the committee on foreign relations He approved the movement of the French people, in this instance, but believed the adoption of these resolutions impolitic and unwarrantable. The case might arise, in which it would be pro per for Congress to make declarations recognising ine new government when called upon by the Executive to make an appropriation for a minister the new republic
